After completing this course, you should be able to:

Research Design: Selecting and defining a research problem, need for research design, features of a good research design, different research designs (exploratory, descriptive experimental and diagnostic research).

LEARNING OUTCOMES

It may be a normal tendency that a research student might be susceptible to confuse between Research Techniques, Research Methods and Research Methodology. we talk of Research Methodology we not only talk of the Research Methods but also consider the logic behind the methods we use in the context of our research study and explain why we are using a particular method or technique

OBJECTIVES OF THE PROGRAM:

After completing this course, you should be able to: Scientific research involves not only an individual activity, based on the information and data collection or the formulation of some innovative theses. It also involves communicating the results to a differentiated audience. One should find a purpose for the data collected: it should be taken over by their recipients in an accessible form. In other words, there must be a balance between the content of a research on the one hand, and the shape of the wording on the other.

LEARNING OUTCOMES

Scientific research involves, besides specialized knowledge, the mastery of appropriate working techniques. To be considered a scientific paper, a text must meet two fundamental prerequisites, namely: to bring something new and to be useful. Between these extremely general boundaries, the scientific works take a wide variety of shapes, using a combination of several classification criteria.

OBJECTIVES OF THE PROGRAM:

Many different disciplines and professions have standards for behavior that suit their particular aims and goals. These standards also help members of the discipline to coordinate their actions or activities and to establish the public's trust of the discipline. For instance, ethical standards govern conduct in medicine, law, engineering, and business

LEARNING OUTCOMES

Ethical standards promote the values that are essential to collaborative work, such as trust, accountability, mutual respect, and fairness. Most researchers want to receive credit for their contributions and do not want to have their ideas stolen or disclosed prematurely. Many of the ethical norms help to ensure that researchers can be held accountable to the public.

Outcomes of the Program:

One-stop-shops and large-scale incubators and support providers have capacity to serve large numbers of firms and hold a range of capacities in-house. However, experiences from local programmes show that small scale development support providers can sometimes have advantages, especially when local knowledge is critical and when in-person interactions play a role

Outcomes of the Program:

Scalable start-ups have advantages and disadvantages. Judged as vulnerable types of business entities due to business failure. Along with the growth of start-up companies, job creation is increased, improving the labor market. This is why governments in emerging economies are focusing on start-ups in order to reduce poverty and unemployment.

OBJECTIVES OF THE PROGRAM:

- Researchers or authors are usually added to scientific publications because they made a substantial contribution to the findings, or for professional courtesy.
- How inventors are listed on a patent in order to determine the legibility of the registration of the patent.

LEARNING OUTCOMES

Many of researchers are recognized for their hard work by being included in the authorship of a scientific publication. However, in cases where their revelations result in unobvious, useful, and novel discoveries, researchers will seek to protect their intellectual property by registering a patent. Authorship is subjectively determined, while inventor-ship is legally designated.

LEARNING OUTCOMES

Start your funding search by reviewing the many internal funding opportunities offered by the University of JNTU KAKINADA. Depending on what your funding needs are, departments and units across campus offer a variety of funding programs and awards for researchers throughout every step of their career. Sponsors sometimes limit the number of applications that may be submitted from a single institution. In that case, internal team will announce an internal competition, and reviewers determine which proposal may go forward.
